RECORD OF A FRIENDSHIP

The Correspondence of Wilhelm Reich and A. S. Neill

Edited, with an introduction, by Beverley Placzek

Wilhelm Reich and A. S. Neill first met in Norway in 1936; they remained friends for over twenty years, until Reich's death in 1957. Though they were separated for most of those years, first by the war and later by the travel restrictions of the McCarthy era, a steady exchange of letters, back and forth across the ocean, kept their friendship alive. These letters stand as a record of a friendship between two remarkable men. Neill, a schoolmaster and child psychologist, was the founder of the radical school Summerhill. Reich was an iconoclastic psychoanalyst known for his unorthodox theories on society and sexuality. Both were deeply dedicated men, with a strong belief in the redemptive power of unconstricted, natural development. Their letters chronicle the problems and joys of their work, their delight in the development of their children, their distress at what was happening in the world around them. Record of a Friendship glows throughout with their affection and the enrichment each brought to the life of the other, despite the enormous differences in background, the pressures of a censorious society, and their own sharply defined personalities.
